Take him back to Tulsa, one more time

Tulsa Sound icon Leon Russell's tour will light up Osage Million Dollar Elm on April 24, tour industry tracker Pollstar Pro reports.

The longtime Tulsa musician recently added 29 tour dates, including a Dec. 19 show at the Wormy Dog Saloon in Oklahoma City's Bricktown district. He will also perform at the Norman Music Festival on April 25, on Norman's Main Street, the site shows.

He will also perform in New York, Tennessee, North Carolina, Arkansas, Hawaii, Texas and more, the site shows.

The keyboardist, guitarist and songwriter was a pivotal figure in the blues-rock movement known as the Tulsa Sound and has performed, recorded and toured with artists including J.J. Cale, Elton John, Eric Clapton, Willie Nelson, Glen Campbell, Jerry Lee Lewis, Joe Cocker, George Harrison, B.B. King, Freddie King, the Byrds and many more.

He was also part of the studio band for legendary music producer Phil Spector and owned Tulsa's Church Studio for many years before selling it to fellow musician and Tractors band member Steve Ripley.

Earlier this year, Elton John let slip on Elvis Costello's talk show that he had tentative plans to record with Russell on a new album, to be produced by T-Bone Burnett. No firm recording or release date has been announced.
